HIGHLIGHTS IN ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT HARDING

Where genius has made for great possibilities, justice and happiness must be reflected in a greater common welfare.

Our most dangerous tendency is to expect too much of government, and at the same time do for it too little.

I accept my part with single-mindedness of purpose and humility of spirit, and implore the favor and guidance of God in His heaven. With these I am unafraid, and confidently face the future.

Since freedom impelled, and independence inspired, and nationality exalted, a world super-government is contrary to everything we cherish and can have no sanction by our republic.

I wish for an America no less alert in guarding against dangers from within than it is watchful against enemies from without. Our fundamental law recognizes no class, no group, no section, there must be none in legislation or administration.

We want to do our part in making offensive warfare so hateful that governments and peoples, who resort to it, must prove the righteousness of their cause or stand as outlaws before the bar of civilization.

There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing or dying for national preservation.

America is ready to encourage, eager to initiate, anxious to participate in any fruitful program likely to lessen the probability of war, and promote the brotherhood of mankind which must be God's highest conception of human relationship.

Confident of our ability to work out our own destiny, and jealously guarding our right to do so, we seek no part in directing the destinies of the Old world. We do not mean to be entangled. We will accept no responsibility except as our own conscience and judgment, in each instance, may determine.

When the governments of the earth shall have established a freedom like our own and shall have sanctioned the pursuit of peace as we have practiced it, I believe the last sorrow and the final sacrifice of international warfare will have been written.

Our eyes never will be blind to a developing menace, our ears never deaf to the call of civilization. We recognize the new order in the world, with the closer contacts which progress has wrought. We sense the call of the human heart for fellowship, fraternity and co-operation. We crave friendship, and harbor no hate.

But America, our America, the America builded on the foundation laid by the inspired fathers, can be a party to no permanent military alliance. It can enter into no political commitments, nor assume any economic obligations which will subject our decisions to any other than our own authority.

JAP IS FOUND ON THE CAPITOL ROOF

How He Reached Point Is Mystery to Police.

Washington, March 4.—Peering over a ledge of the roof of the capitol directly overlooking the stand upon which the inaugural ceremonies took place, a Japanese was discovered by a policeman, this morning. How he got there remained a mystery.

Yanked from his perch, he professed no knowledge of English and shook his head in response to questioning of his captors.

Upon being released by them, he disappeared in the crowd already assembled on the capitol plaza.

Will Answer Charges.

Cleveland, March 4.—Judge K. M. Landis, supreme arbiter of baseball, is coming to Cleveland, either March 18 or 26 and will here answer the charges made against him by Congressman D. F. Welty, of Ohio, at the annual meeting of the Cleveland recreation council, according to an announcement here. Judge Landis will make the trip here in a mail aeroplane, it was said.

RESUMPTION IS SUPREME TASK

Reconstruction and Restoration Will Follow.

NEW PRESIDENT DECRIES PROFITS WROUGHT IN WAR

Something Wrong, He Says, with Ideals of Democracy

When One Portion of the Citizenship Sacrifices All and Another Portion Turns to Private Gain for Itself.

Washington, March 4.—Solemnly mindful of the great responsibilities that will be his for the next four years and expressing a prayer for divine guidance in the solution of the momentous problems facing him, Warren Gamaliel Harding, of Ohio, became the twenty-ninth president of the United States shortly after noon, today, in an inauguration ceremony in which simplicity and lack of ostentation replaced the usual pomp and display.

Before a great standing crowd of thousands, which completely filled the broad plaza and eddied for blocks around the capitol itself, the new president accepted the supreme gift of the republic in a short inaugural address—an address in which he did not attempt to outline in other than general terms the program of international and domestic problems to be followed by his administration.

"For my part," he said simply, "I accept with single-mindedness of purpose and humility of spirit and implore the favor and guidance of God in His heaven. With these, I am unafraid and confidently face the future."

The new president pledged an administration that will stand four-square on the principles of the republic as laid down by its founders. He promised his administration will work unceasingly for the furtherance of America's greatness in world affairs and for the expansion of her commerce and influence—all without deviating from Washington's policy of "no entangling alliances" with foreign powers.

Supreme Task.

The supreme task facing the new administration, President Harding said, is the resumption "of our normal way, reconstruction, readjustment, restoration." To the hastening of these, he pledged himself, but he warned, at the same time, that there is no instant step from disorder to order, that the recovery from war must be natural and unimpeded by any "wild experiments."

The league of nations, paramount issue of the campaign, was not mentioned, specifically, by the new president, but concerning the foreign policy of his administration, he had this to say:

"We seek no part in directing the destinies of the Old world. We do not mean to be entangled * * * America can be a party to no permanent military alliance. It can enter into no political commitments, nor assume any economic obligations which will subject our decisions to any other than our own authority * * * A world super-government is contrary to everything we cherish and can have no sanction by our republic."

The mandate of the people, November 2, in this respect, was plain, it was asserted by the new president. Concerning this, he said:

"In a deliberate questioning of a suggested change of our national policy, where internationality was to supercede nationality, we turned to a referendum by the American people. There was ample discussion and there is a public mandate in manifest understanding."

This, however, must not be taken to mean, President Harding said, that America is going to adopt a policy of aloofness and isolation in world matters. He interrupted the spirit of America as ready and eager to participate and if necessary, to initiate steps towards approximate disarmament and a better understanding among nations. Mankind, he said, needs a benediction of understanding.

FIRST TIME IN MANY MONTHS

Woodrow Wilson Is Seen by Big Washington Crowd.

A GREAT PHYSICAL EFFORT IS REQUIRED

Wilson Determined To Participate in Inaugural Ceremonies of the Day.

Washington, March 4.—Woodrow Wilson left the White House, today, making the greatest physical effort that he has made in eighteen months.

The president, today, made the first real public appearance he has made since he was stricken ill many months ago. Although he has appeared in a theater box, this is the first time that he has gone before a great throng.

Early this morning, Mr. Wilson was up and alert for the day's proceedings. He has displayed the greatest interest in the inaugural and insisted upon participating in the ceremonies to the limit of his strength.

The president mapped out a program for himself which will keep him constantly busy from 11 o'clock this morning, until late in the afternoon.

Although Mr. Wilson is making a greater show of strength, today, than he had made for eighteen months, it was not the old Woodrow Wilson, vigorous and alert, who appeared before the inaugural throng.

Heavy Selling.

New York, March 4.—The action of the directors of Atlantic Gulf and West Indies in deferring action on the preferred dividend for sixty days was reflected in heavy selling of the Atlantic Gulf issues, at the opening of the stock market, today.

SUBMARINES ARE ON ROCKS

Strike Rocks in Fog on New England Coast

COAST GUARDSMEN RESCUE TEN MEN

Take Them Off Boat Ashore Off Fisher's Island—Efforts To Save Craft.

New Bedford, Massachusetts, March 4.—Two American submarines were on the rocks off the southern New England coast, today.

Word received here said that coast guardsmen had taken off ten men of a crew of thirty-three from the United States submarine, O-7, ashore off Fisher's Island. United States submarine, O-8, was fast on a ledge of rocks between Pebbiese and Gull Island, in Buzzards' bay. An unsuccessful attempt was made, this forenoon, by the United States revenue cutter, Acushnet, to drag the submarine from the ledge. Another attempt will be made at high tide, this afternoon. As the undersea boat is in no immediate danger, the officers and crew remained aboard, but the Acushnet is standing by for emergency. Both submarines were bound for New London, Connecticut, from Boston, yesterday afternoon, when they got lost in the fog.

Farmer Is Killed.

Dayton, March 4.—Returning from here to his home, near Tippecanoe City, yesterday evening, Charles Dick, fifty-five, farmer, was instantly killed when his car turned over, seven miles north of this city.

Liberty Bonds.

New York, March 4—Opening Liberty bonds: 3½s, 99.99; first 4¼s 97.16; second 4¼s, 96.90; third 4½s, 96.26; fourth 4¼s, 97.14; Victory 3¾s, 97.45; Victory 4¾s, 97.52.

WASHINGTON IS WELL PLEASED

Glimpses "First Lady of Land" in "Harding Blue."

MRS. HARDING HOLDS INTEREST OF WOMEN

Contribution of Modistes to New Administration Wins Immediate Approval.

Washington, March 4.—Although Warren G. Harding was supposedly the cynosure of all eyes in Washington, today, there was perhaps closer feminine attention given to the new "first lady of the land."

"Harding blue"—the contribution of the modistes to the new administration—predominated.

Women of the national capital had their first glimpse of the wardrobe which Mrs. Harding recently purchased in New York, and they were satisfied.

A gown of "Harding blue" charmeuse, cut in coat effect and trimmed with steel beads, was selected by Mrs. Harding for the greatest occasion of her life. She wore a straw hat, also of "Harding blue," novel in its design and striking in its effect. Cold weather forced Mrs. Harding to lay aside the satin wrap of "Harding blue," which she had desired to wear and she appeared in a fur coat of broadtail, with a deep square collar of chinchilla.

Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, also, wore blue, although she elected navy blue, leaving the field for "Harding blue" entirely to the new first lady. Mrs. Coolidge's gown was of blue charmeuse with a top of blue brochet crepe over henna. She wore a blue straw hat trimmed with henna feathers.

VOICING HOPES FOR THE FUTURE

Calvin Coolidge Takes Office as Vice President.

PLEDGES HIMSELF TO PUBLIC SERVICE

In Accord with Precepts of the Nation's Founders.

Coolidge Calls Attention to the Great Obligations Laid on United States Senate in Preservation of Liberty.

Washington, March 4.—Calvin Coolidge, of Massachusetts, took office as vice-president of the United States, today, and Thomas Riley Marshall, of Indiana, relinquished that office—both voicing the hope that their nation may follow the precepts of its founders.

Calvin Coolidge, tall, austere and somewhat shy—New Englander—stood on the rostrum of the senate of the United States, faced that body over which he will preside for the next four years, took the oath of office and expressed the hope that "the vision of past generations may be more and more the reality of generations yet to come."

Thomas Riley Marshall, frail, gray-and with a trace of regret in his voice as he relinquished office, had, a few minutes before, delivered his valedictory.

"I may have failed, but I have tried to keep the faith," Mr. Marshall said in farewell. "I have never doubted, so far as the principles of civil government are concerned, the pillars of Hercules rest upon the Declaration of Independence and the constitution of the United States. To my mind, there is no beyond. I freely grant the right of this people to change our form of government and to adopt other basic principles, but if it is to be done, let it be done decently and directly, so that all of us may know it."

Having bade his farewell, Mr. Marshall administered the oath of office to his successor and stepped out of the picture—a private citizen.

Takes Up Gavel.

Calvin Coolidge took up the little ivory gavel—the same that has been used by vice-presidents for more than a century—and called the senate to order and addressed the body briefly.

"Five generations ago, there was revealed to the people of this nation a new relationship between man and man, which they declared and proclaimed in the American constitution. Therein they recognized a legislature empowered to express the will of the people in law, a judiciary required to determine and state such law and an executive charged with securing obedience to the law, all holding their office not by reason of some superior force, but through the duly determined conscience of their countrymen.

"To the house, close to the heart of the nation, renewing its whole membership by frequent elections, representing directly the people, reflecting their common purpose, has been granted a full measure of the power of legislation and exclusive authority to originate taxation.

To Preserve Liberty.

"To the senate, renewing its membership by degrees, representing in part the sovereign states, has been granted not only a full measure of the power of legislation, but, if possible, far more important functions. To it is intrusted the duty of review of the president's treaty-making power. But its greatest function of all, too little mentioned and too little understood, whether exercised in legislating or reviewing, is the preservation of liberty. Not merely the rights of the majority, they little need protection, but the rights of the minority, from whatever source they may be assailed. The great object for us to seek here, for the constitution identifies the vice-presidency with the senate, is to continue to make this chamber, as it was intended by the fathers, the citadel of liberty. An enormous power is here conferred, capable of much good or ill, open, it may be,

SEVENTH SON OF BUCKEYE STATE

Inaugurated President of the United States.

WASHINGTON ENJOYS A BEAUTIFUL DAY

National Capital Is Mecca for a Great Throng.

Visitors Unmindful That Ceremonies Are To Be Void of All That Is Spectacular and Pour into Washington.

Washington, March 4.—Inauguration day—the day on which Ohio sent the seventh of her sons into the White House—dawned clear and cold this morning.

The temperature was not far from freezing and there was a stiff breeze whipping the flags that decorated Pennsylvania avenue and the government buildings.

It was typical "Harding weather" in its look of rain or other disagreeable features. Not once during the long campaign at Marion did rain fall on a front-porch delegation, and friends of the new president, crowding the capital, today, in large numbers, were gleeful at the continuance of "Harding luck." They took it as a happy augury.

It was a strange inauguration day for Washington. In other years, crowds moved restlessly up and down the street all night long, and dawn found many of them camping sleepily in points of vantage along historic Pennsylvania avenue, to view the great cavalcade of dignitaries. This morning, a machine-gun could have swept the length and breath of the avenue with but few casualties. Not a band blared forth in the early stillness. Not a sentinel paced a beat in the city, except for the policemen who idly swung their clubs in front of the Willard, where the president-elect and Mrs. Harding and the vice-president-elect and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge are quartered.

Washington is crowded but only comfortably so. Undeterred by the advance notices of "no room" thousands of visitors have poured into the capital during the last few days and continued pouring in this morning, but their numbers are few in comparison with the choking throngs of other years. Ohioans, proud of again having found their place in the sun, largely dominate the crowd of visitors, and among these are many from Marion, the home town of the new president. A special train loaded with Marionites, arrived during the forenoon to swell the Ohio representation.

Without Pomp.

There was something coldly and distinctly business-like about today's inaugural. Gone were the pomp and panoply and display of other years, with their extravagant decorations, crashing bands, marching military and horse-drawn carriages of state, proudly bearing silk-hatted and frock-coated dignitaries in great parade.

In their stead, came, today, the swift motor car, little music and an apparent desire to get things over in the shortest possible time and settle down to the momentous labors that confront the new administration.

The lack of military display was particularly noticeable. Three troops of the Third United States cavalry, from the nearby post, Fort Myer, were the only regulars on inaugural duty and their services were utilized more as an auxiliary police arm than for display. Around the White House, where Woodrow Wilson was spending his last few hours of an eventful administration, there was only a force of high school cadets and the usual police.

Today's events began to march with swift efficiency, shortly after 10 o'clock, when half a dozen automobiles drew smartly up before the Willard hotel. They formed the entire parade of the Harding inaugural. Only the first four cars were really in it, the others being occupied by secret service men and reporters. Here all the members of the inaugural party were picked up.

NOMINATIONS ARE CONFIRMED

Senate Meets in Executive Session Today.

HEARS SHORT ADDRESS BY NEW PRESIDENT

Cabinet Appointments Immediately Taken Up—Harding Goes to White House.

Washington, March 4.—Within twenty minutes after President Harding finished his inaugural speech today, the senate was reconvened in executive session.

The president was escorted from the president's room by Senator Lodge, Republican leader of the senate.

The president addressed the senate for five minutes in executive session. He then returned to the president's room and from there, left the capitol, returning to the White House.

Nominations Confirmed.

Washington, March 4.—The senate, this afternoon, confirmed President Harding's cabinet, within an hour after he had finished his inaugural addresses. Those confirmed were:

Secretary of State—Charles Evans Hughes, of New York.

Secretary of the Treasury—Andrew W. Mellon, of Pittsburgh.

Secretary of War—John W. Weeks, of Massachusetts.

Attorney General—Harry M. Daugherty, of Ohio.

Postmaster General—Will H. Hays, of Indiana.

Secretary of the Navy—Edwin Denby, of Michigan.

Secretary of the Interior—Albert B. Fall, of New Mexico.

Secretary of Agriculture—Henry Wallace, of Iowa.

Secretary of Commerce—Herbert Hoover, of California.

Secretary of Labor—James J. Davis, of Illinois and Pennsylvania.

A Short Address.

Confirmation came after the new president had addressed the senate for five minutes in executive session. After this short talk, the president left the capitol for the White House, and before he reached the lower end of Pennsylvania avenue his cabinet selections were officially endorsed by the new senate.

As a courtesy to the only sitting senator to be named for the cabinet—Albert B. Fall, of New Mexico—the senate confirmed him first, instead of taking up the nominations in the regular order with that of secretary of state heading the list. In his short speech, the new president expressed a desire that the amicable relations which he holds with the senate—having served six years with most of the members—be continued during his term as the chief executive. For this reason, the president said he wished to present his cabinet nominations to the senate in person. The senate's compliance with the first request of the new president was swift.

Without a Hitch.

It had been rumored that there might be some opposition manifested to several of the appointments—particularly those of Justice Hughes, as secretary of state, and Herbert Hoover, as secretary of commerce. But this opposition did not manifest itself in the slightest degree and the entire slate went through as scheduled and without a hitch.

After the confirmation of the cabinet, there was a short discussion on the program of legislation that will be attempted and also upon the probable date of calling the extra session. The senate then adjourned, to meet again at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, when it will pay its respects to the memory of Champ Clark, whose body lies within a stone's throw of the capitol.

No definite decision of the date of the extra session was reached and probably will not be for a few days until the new president has a chance for more extended conference with leaders of the senate and house. The best judgment of correspondent leaders is that the new session will be called to meet about April 14.

The president was escorted on his drive to the White House by Mrs. Harding, and his military and naval aid. Huge crowds had been gathering to greet him and amidst an unending cheer he drove down Pennsylvania avenue with his hat off, acknowledging the cheers.

As the party turned into the White House grounds a band played "Onward Christian Soldiers."

The president and Mrs. Harding went into their new home where they will be joined by members of their immediate family at luncheon.

Later in the afternoon, it is understood, the president will announce some appointments to office.

Charles D. Schaad, manager of the Midland Mutual Life Insurance company, of this city; Simon W. Baker, Mrs. Jeanette L. Hutchinson, T. N. Neff and Douglass Felt, representatives of the company, are in Columbus today attending the annual state convention of the company. Mrs. Schaad and Mrs. Baker are guests of the party which will remain over Saturday to attend the National Sales congress to be held Saturday.

WILSON VETOES FORDNEY BILL

Raps Emergency Tariff Measure in Message.

DECLARES IT GIVES COUNTRY NO RELIEF

Efforts To Override Veto in the House Fail—Wilson's Message to Congress.

Washington, March 4.—The Fordney emergency tariff bill was vetoed last night by President Wilson.

In a message to congress Wilson declared that "this is no time for the erection here of high trade barriers," and that the measure "would not furnish in any substantial degree the relief sought by the producers of most of the staple commodities which it covers."

"The situation in which many of the farmers of the country find themselves can not be remedied by a measure of this sort," the president said in his message. "There is no short way out of existing conditions," he added, "and measures of this sort can only have the effect of deceiving the farmers and of raising false hopes among them."

The farmer needs a better system of domestic marketing and credit, he said, "but especially larger foreign markets for his surplus products." "Clearly measures of this sort," he continued, "will not conduce to an expansion of the foreign market."

The president said the measure "has only slight interest, so far as its prospective revenue yields are concerned," and declared that the rates established in the bill "either equal or exceed those established under the Payne-Aldrich act, in which the principle of protection reached its high-water mark, and the enactment of which was followed by an effective exhibition of protest on the part of the majority of the American people.

"I do not believe," the president said, "that the sober judgment of the masses of the people of the nation, or even of the special class whose interests are immediately affected by this measure, will sanction a return, especially in view of conditions which lend even less justification for such action, to a policy of legislation for selfish interests which will foster monopoly and increase the disposition to look upon the government as an instrument for private gain instead of an instrument for the promotion of the general well being."

Efforts to override President Wilson's veto of the emergency tariff bill failed in the house, and the measure, originally designed to aid the farmers, thereby met its death. The vote on motion to pass the measure over the president's veto was 291 for and 132 against.

SITUATION IS HOPEFUL TODAY

Germany Is Considering New Forms of Taxation.

GERMAN CABINET SUPPORTS SIMMONS

Believed Foreign Minister Will Be Authorized To Present Better Proposals to Allies.

London, March 4.—The head of the German cabinet's deliberations on the indemnity situation is hopeful, it was announced by the German delegation, today. "The members of the government at Berlin are backing up Dr. Walter Simons—the German foreign minister and head of the German delegation in London. The ministry is already considering new forms of taxation, and it is most likely it is to us we shall be authorized to present a new indemnity offer to the allies, Monday."

Premier Lloyd George, in delivering the allied ultimatum, charged that the Germans were being insufficiently taxed. Strong approval of Premier Lloyd George's speech arraigning Germany for her war crimes and of the terms of the allies' four-day indemnity ultimatum was voiced by the British press.

"We are prepared not to shrink from a more drastic treaty to enforce the original one," declared the Chronicle.

The Daily News points out that the reparation demanded by the allies is not for imaginary wrong, but for real ones.

"The essential fact is that the door has been left open for further negotiation," said the Daily Herald, organ of the Labor party. "There is a general feeling that sanctions, or penalties, will not be required and that Germany will submit satisfactory proposals before Monday."

Cabinet Meets.

Berlin, March 4.—The German cabinet met, this morning, to draw up from instructions for the Indemnity delegation at London, based upon the answer which was returned, yesterday, to the Germans' counter-proposals. It was authoritatively stated that Dr. Walter Simons, the foreign minister, will not be supplanted as head of the German delegation. According to present plans, Dr. Simons is expected to reply in detail to Premier Lloyd George's charges. A previous meeting had been held from 6 to 9 o'clock, Thursday evening, but no decision was reached.

PASSING OF CLARK FELT IN WASHINGTON

Gives Ceremonies of Today a Touch of Sadness.

Washington, March 4.—Hanging like a pall over the jollity and merry-making of the inaugural visitors, today, was the death of Champ Clark, the great Democratic leader, who almost was president. In Congress Hall hotel, under the shadow of his beloved capitol, where he labored so diligently for more than a quarter of a century, and within a stone's throw of where today's ceremonies took place, the great Missourian's body lay in state, mourned by thousands.

The cheer and noises with which the crowd welcomed a new president drifted down through the budding trees in the capitol grounds and penetrated faintly into the dim room where death had claimed a great man.

An Announcement.

Washington, March 4.—President Wilson, at the capitol, today, announced that he would not sign the immigration regulation bill and that the measure would die by a "pocket veto." The president signed the sundry civil appropriation bill and the amended Langley bill providing for the construction and maintenance of hospitals for disabled former service men.

A Pocket Veto.

Washington, March 4.—The army appropriations bill was killed, today, when President Wilson exercised a "pocket veto" on the measure.

FAILS UNDER GREAT STRAIN

Wilson Unable To Hear the Inaugural Address.

QUIETLY WITHDRAWS FROM THE SCENE

Rides Home Alone While Thousands Turn Attention to the New President.

Washington, March 4.—The terrific strain imposed by the inaugural ceremonies proved too great, today, for Woodrow Wilson, and he retired to his new home on S street without witnessing the inauguration of his successor, Warren G. Harding, of Ohio.

President Harding became the new president at 1 P. M. Almost an hour before President Wilson had left the capitol, returning alone in a motor to his new residence.

Mr. Wilson's effort was a game one.

Under a strain which was apparent to all who saw his drawn face and limping legs, as he rode to the capitol with his successor, signed some last-minute bills allowed others to die by a pocket veto and then, very tired and much moved he was assisted to his car and rode alone down the long avenue, while the attention of thousands outside the capitol was riveted on the new president.

The efforts which the president made to fulfill his part of the program challenged the admiration of all who saw him. He looked very feeble as he got into the car at the White House, his face was terribly drawn, but he lifted a wavering hand to his silk hat as Harding got in and seated himself beside him.

A Look Backward.

As the car drove off, the president cast a backward glace over his shoulder at the great white mansion that he was leaving for the last time. It was a look of peculiar intensity.

Up the avenue, the president and president-elect had their heads close together in close conversation. The two men presented a never-to-be-forgotten picture as they drove slowly along, Woodrow Wilson, shrunken, his face drawn and his left arm held at a peculiar angle—Harding, the picture of radiant health and vitality. With their heads close together, they drove up the avenue in the bright sunshine and cheering lanes of people. Harding constantly tilted his hat slightly to the cheers, without withdrawing his attention from the feeble man at his right. The physical effort apparently was too much for the president and he did not attempt to acknowledge the plaudits.

At the capitol, the president was helped out of the car at the door, Brooks, his giant negro valet, put his two broad hands under his shoulders and with a secret service man at his side, the descent to the steps was made. There were few people who saw Woodrow Wilson get out of the car, but those few will never forget it. Involuntary exclamations of pity and admiration broke from the spectators as the president gamely started through the revolving door.

The arrangement committee had thoughtfully provided a wheel chair just inside the door. But as difficult as was the journey—the effort being made was apparent—Mr. Wilson waved away the proffered help and, leaning heavily on his cane, started for the elevator. His left leg dragged a bit and his left arm was held at an odd angle. Two secret service men were close beside him. It was one of the most pathetic scenes ever witnessed in the capitol, and there were tears in the eyes of many who viewed it.

Feeble and Strong.

The feeble man and the strong man parted at the capitol door—Harding striding resolutely ahead and up the steps to the president's room—Wilson, the picture of broken health, limping to the elevator. He was lifted to the chamber floor and went through with his last legislative tasks.

These finished, the strength which had impelled him to undertake the trip, seemed to sag and at the earnest solicitation of those about him, he decided to forego the ordeal outside. Attended only by his valet, Brooks, and a single secret service man, he went out of the capitol and into private life, almost unnoted and unmarked. The attention of the thousands outside already was on his successor as they moved restlessly to and fro in the cold March sunshine.

ALLEGED MURDERER OF OFFICER JAILED

Columbus Negro Is Captured After Several Days' Hunt.

Columbus, March 4.—After hiding several days in the home of Rufus Lane, No. 245 Johnson street, "Pomp" Brooks, twenty-nine, colored, has been jailed on the charge of murdering Patrolman Jesse E. Reall, late last Saturday night.

IODINE HEALS RUNNING SORES, QUICK RELIEF

Old sores, abscesses, boils, ringworms, chronic ulcers etc. are best treated and most quickly healed by the application of Iodine, says a well-known authority who also states that the wide-spread use of Iodine in army medical corps has thoroughly proved its great value. He warns, however against the use of common tincture of Iodine, because in this form it irritates and stains the skin. The new form of Iodine—Lanolated Iodine—is the best for such purposes. This comes in the form of an ointment and is practically stainless, will not irritate, and is readily absorbed by the tissues. In the Lanolated form, Iodine is easy and pleasant to use and every disagreeable feature has been removed. It quickly penetrates, soothes, cleanses, and heals and is really delightful. Nearly all leading druggists now sell and recommend Lanolated Iodine. Try it. We believe nothing you have ever used will prove so effective and satisfying.—Adv.

Like a Halo.

The sun struck the inaugural stand in such a manner as to make his head appear in a halo. It was so marked that there was comment on it from the crowd.

Mrs. Harding listened to the speech with great emotion. She followed every word with an intensity seldom seen, and appeared very much moved.

Thereafter, the interruptions were frequent, reaching the highest point when the new president declared that "America could enter no permanent military alliance, nor enter any political commitments, nor assume any economic obligations which will subject our decisions to any but our own authority."

There was a great outburst, too, when the new president said a "world super-government was contrary to everything we cherish."

The mechanical device used was very efficacious and his voice was carried well out over the great throng.

The new president finished his speech at 1:55 o'clock having spoken thirty-five minutes, bareheaded, in the wintry air. The first man to seize his hand was Vice-President Coolidge. Senators, who have known him long in the senate, some members of the outgoing cabinet and others, crowded about to congratulate him.

As soon as these were over, a lane was cleared and President Harding walked to the president's room, surrounded by a throng of senators and friends.

Dozens of the new president's Ohio friends thronged into the cloakrooms and an impromptu reception was held.

DO YOU CATCH COLD EASILY?

HOW TO AVOID IT

Colds are due to germs. No one can prevent the germs from getting into your nose and throat. But you can help keep plenty of strong, vigorous, "antibodies" in your blood to fight and kill off the nasty "cold germs" before they do you any harm.

To develop these germ destroying "antibodies" properly, you must have plenty of pure rich, red blood and a strong, vigorous constitution—in fact, this is the best preventive against almost any disease.

If you are weak, nervous or run-down, or subject to colds, take no chances. One day you may develop serious throat, bronchial or lung trouble or perhaps pneumonia and you may go off like a shot. Therefore commence to enrich your blood and fortify yurself against "disease germs" today. To build more and better blood and make stronger nerves, there is nothing superior to NUXATED IRON as it contains organic iron like the iron in your blood combined with a product representing the principal chemical constituent of active living nerve force for feeding the nerves. Nuxated iron may therefore be said to be both a blood and a nerve food. It often increases the bodily and mental vigor, strength and endurance in two weeks' time.

Over 4,000,000 people are using it annually. It has been highly endorsed by former United States Senators, U. S. Army Generals, many physicians and prominent men. Even the Pope at Rome mentioned it favorably in a communication to the Proprietor of the Pharmacy Normale of Paris.

Satisfaction guaranteed or the manufacturers will refund your money. Beware of substitutes. Look for the word "NUXATED" on every package and the letters N. I. on every tablet. Sold by all druggists.—Adv.

with the exception of the president and Mrs. Wilson.

At the White House.

From the hotel, the automobiles proceeded the few blocks to the White House and drew up before the great veranda that fronts the building. From the door emerged, for the last time, Woodrow Wilson—bent, broken in health, leaning on a cane, his face furrowed and his hair silvered from his eight tumultuous years as chief executive. A curious crowd stood outside the barred fence surrounding the White House grounds to view the final passing of Woodrow Wilson from the great white mansion from which he has at times swayed the world.

They saw him slowly and with difficulty enter the first car in the procession, in which already were seated his successor, President-Elect Harding; Senator Philander C. Knox, of Pennsylvania, and Representative Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois. Into the second car, bearing Mrs. Harding, Senator Knute Nelson, of Minnesota, and Representative William W. Rucker, of Missouri, entered Mrs. Wilson. The third automobile bore Vice President Marshall, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge and Senator Lee S. Overman, of North Carolina.

In the fourth car, were Vice President-Elect Coolidge, Mrs. Marshall and Representative C. Frank Reavis, of Nebraska. The senators and representatives of the party were all members of the congressional inaugural committee, acting as escort to the presidential figures.

"Whatever its faults, whatever its human imperfections, there is no legislative body in all history that has used its powers with more wisdom and discretion, more uniformly for the execution of the public will, or more in harmony with the spirit of the authority of the people which has created it, than the United States senate.

"I take up the duties the people have assigned me under the constitution, which we can neither enlarge nor diminish, of presiding over this senate, agreeably to its rules and regulations, deeply conscious that it will continue to function in harmony with its high traditions as a great deliberative body, without passion and without fear, unmoved by clamour, but most sensitive to the right, the stronghold of government according to law, that the vision of past generations may be more and more the reality of generations yet to come."

SETTLE M. FILLINGER FIRE INSURANCE SUIT

Bucyrus Firm Seeks $1,004.55 on a Note.

R. C. AND VICTORIA SHROLL DEFENDANTS

Mrs. Morgan Agard Is Granted Divorce on Ground of Wilful Absence—Court News.

The case of Morton Fillinger against the United States Fire Insurance company of New York was settled without record in the common pleas court this morning and the costs adjudged against the plaintiff. Fillinger was suing for $1,362 damages as the result of a fire September 20, 1919, in which his residence on Copeland avenue was destroyed. The plaintiff had the property insured with the defendant company.

Suit for $1,004.55.

Suit for judgment for $1,004.55, alleged to be the balance due on a note, was brought in the common pleas court today by Charles W. Roberts and Rufus Kennedy, partners doing business under the firm name of Roberts & Kennedy, against R. C. Shroll and Victoria Shroll.

The petition states the firm, doing business in Bucyrus, received a note from the defendants March 29, 1920, for $1,061.75. The plaintiffs claim only $64.75 has been paid on the principal, and $51.08 interest paid. The suit was brought through Edward J. Myers, of Bucyrus.

Ephemeral Divorce Case.

The divorce suit of Garnet Beck against Karl Beck filed today, was dismissed today on motion of the plaintiff without prejudice to the bringing of a new action. The costs were assessed against the plaintiff and the temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from molesting the plaintiff was dissolved. The motion of the defense to dismiss on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction because the plaintiff has not lived in this county thirty days was sustained.

Husband Gone, Wife Divorced.

Sarah Elizabeth Agard this morning in the common pleas court was granted a divorce from Morgan Agard on the ground of willful absence for eight years. The custody of Lucille Agard, minor child, was awarded to the plaintiff until further order of the court. The costs were adjudged against the defendant, and the decree withheld for thirty days.

Amended Answer.

The amended answer of Irby L. Baird and Lemuel Baird was filed today in the common pleas court in the partition suit of Zilow Foos against Olda Foos and others. The answer was filed through Homer E. Johnson.

Admission of the allegations of the petition is contained in the answer which sets up that the interest of Irby L. Baird in the property has been assigned to Zilla A. Foos, Grover Foos, Retha T. Shoaff, Cora Foos and Lydia M. Foos, and that they are entitled to her interest in the real estate.

Case Is Settled.

The case of Jesse E. Berry against the Haberman Garage company was settled at the cost of the plaintiff without record in the common pleas court today. Berry brought suit to compel the company to produce a note for $40 in court for cancellation.

THOMAS E. LIVINGSTON HEART DISEASE VICTIM

Drops Dead Today at Home Near Richwood.

Richwood, O., March 4.—(Special)—Thomas E. Livingston, well-known farmer, dropped dead of heart trouble this morning at 7:30 o'clock while carrying a horse in the barn at his home, one-half mile south of Somerville. Mr. Livingston had been under the care of a physician for the past few months, but had been able to attend to his chores about the farm.

Mr. Livingston was born March 1, 1861, and was sixty years old. Surviving are the widow, one son, John C. Livingston, of Columbus; two sisters, Mrs. Jennie Bell, of Superior, Wisconsin, who is visiting at the Livingston home at present, and Mrs. Cynthia Ross, of Kenmore; two brothers, Sherman, of Coshocton county, and John Livingston, of Kenton.

The funeral will be held Sunday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock from the Friends' church at Somerville, and will be in charge of Rev. Wilcoxson, pastor of the Friends' church at Byhalia.

EXPOSED TO SMALLPOX, STUDENTS QUIT SCHOOL

Nearly 1,000 Are Out of Schools of Akron.

Akron, O., March 4.—Nearly 1,000 students are out of school here as the result of smallpox, health authorities announced. Several hundred were sent home from Central high school, when it was discovered that a student absent was suffering from the disease. Investigation showed he had exposed all in his classes several days ago. More than 200 are out at West high, according to Dr. Malcolm R. Miller, city epidemologist, while 300 are out at Margaret Park school. Four cases have been found among the students of West high, Miller says.

CITY IN BRIEF

Sentenced to Work—James Neslt, of Akron, was arrested in the Erie yards, early this morning, on a charge of illegal trainriding. When arraigned before the mayor he entered a plea of guilty and was fined five dollars and sentenced to work out the amount on the streets.

Attend Indiana Funeral—Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Sherman are at Logansport, Indiana, today, attending the funeral of their brother-in-law, Albert Fair who died there Monday from sleeping sickness. He slept continuously for six weeks. Mr. Sherman was twenty-nine years of age and is survived by his widow and a son aged seven years.

Home-Building Fund—The International Association of Machinists met Thursday night in the Junior Order hall with a large attendance. Considerable business of importance was transacted and plans were made for the initiation of a class in the first degree next Thursday night. The association voted a donation to the Red Cross milk fund and started a home-building fund.

Rotary Club Next.—Organization work for a Rotary club in Marion is proceeding to the point where it is expected that plans for an organization meeting will be announced within a short time. International Rotary has 800 clubs with a membership of 65,000. Membership is limited to one man in each classification of businesses and professions and the motto of the organization is "He profits most who serves best."

Two Small Fires—Fire department No. 2 was called out Thursday evening at 5:52 to extinguish a fire at the grocery store of W. H. Detinger, No. 340 Waterloo street. The fire was caused by a coal oil stove in the rear of the grocery. The fire was discovered immediately and the only damage done was by smoke. Thursday evening at 8:55 fire department No. 1 was called the H. N. Nese home at No. 201 Neal avenue. A hot plate, too close to a frame partition, set fire to the partition, causing only a slight damage.

To Make Extension.—Plans are being made to build a sixty-foot extension to the rear of the 140 west Center street store rooms now occupied by Long's shoe store and the Market china store. The two stores have a combined frontage of forty feet. The property is owned by S. E. Barlow. It has not been decided whether to make the extension one or two stories. In case two stories are built, the upper floor will be arranged either for office rooms or an assembly room. The store room now occupied by the Market china shop will house the Hughs clothing store after April 1.

Held by Grand Jury.—Otis Simpson, colored, was arrested Thursday evening on north State street on two warrents. Simpson is charged in one affidavit with forging and passing a worthless check for $31.40, December 24, last, the check being payable to the account of George M. Pennell, who filed the affidavit. The other affidavit was sworn to by Reny Henson, who charged Simpson with the theft of two watches and a pair of ear rings, all of the value of $102, on or about November 18, last. Simpson was arraigned before Mayor T. E. Andrews this morning on the check forging charge. He entered a plea of guilty and was bound over to the grand jury, his bond being fixed at $1,000.

For Theft of Coal.—George Williams, Harry Holcomb, John Lower, Howard Gleeson and Pearl Hunter, all of Owens, were arrested by officers of the Hocking Valley, Thursday evening, on charges of petit larceny. They were arraigned before Mayor T. E. Andrews this morning to answer to affidavits filed against them by W. L. Price, charging them each with the theft of a ton of coal valued at seven dollars. They entered pleas of guilty and were each fined $10 and costs and ordered to pay the company for the coal. The amount assessed against each was $20.30, three paying at once and being released.

One hundred and fifty boys were present at the Union Boy Scout meeting Thursday evening in the Y. M. C. A. building. Carl McHarg presided and read a letter from Fire Chief T. J. McFarland thanking the Boy Scouts for their valuable assistance in taking care of the crowd at the fire of the Hoch Motor Sales company last week. RESUMPTION IS SUPREME TASK

[illegible] to prosperity and [illegible]

But no nation cursed by man can [illegible] the universal [illegible] of war. Our most dangerous foe is the expectation that we can expect too much of government and do for it too little. We must face a condition of grim [illegible] charge off our losses and get afresh [illegible]

I speak for administrative efficiency, for lightened tax burdens, for sound commercial practices, for adequate credit facilities, for the omission of unnecessary interference of government with business, for an end to government's experiment in business and for more efficient business in governmental administration."

The new president made a plea for a better understanding between labor and capital.

"I had rather," he said, "submit our industrial controversies to the conference table in advance, than to a settlement table after conflict and suffering."

Protect the Tariff.

I favor for a protective tariff to keep out a flood of cheap foreign goods, which would choke American industries, is greater today than ever before, the president asserted. America, he said, must adjust her tariffs to the new order. Above all else, the new president pledged his administration to be one of service.

"Service," he said, "is the supreme commitment of life. I pledge an administration wherein all agencies to government are called to serve and ever promote an understanding of government purely as an expression of popular will.

"One can not stand in this presence and be unmindful of the tremendous responsibility. If I felt that there is to be sole responsibility in the executive for the America of tomorrow, I would shrink from the burden. But here are a hundred millions, with common concern and shared responsibilities, answerable to God and country. The republic summons them to duty and I invite cooperation.

"I have taken the solemn oath of office on that passage of Holy Writ wherein it is asked:

"'What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God.' This I plight to God and country."

The Inaugural Address.

My Countrymen:—When one surveys the world about him after the great storm, noting the marks of destruction and yet rejoicing in the ruggedness of the things which withstood it, if he is an American he breathes the clarified atmosphere with a strange mingling of regret and new hope. We have seen a world passion spend its fury, but we contemplate our republic unshaken, and hold our civilization secure. Liberty—liberty within the law—and civilization are inseparable, and though both were threatened we find them now secure; and there comes to Americans the profound assurance that our representative government is the highest expression and surest guaranty of both.

Standing in this presence, mindful of the solemnity of this occasion, feeling the emotions which no one may know until he senses the great weight of responsibility for himself, I must utter my belief in the divine inspiration of the founding fathers. Surely there must have been God's intent in the making of this new-world republic. Ours is an organic law which had but one ambiguity, and we saw that effaced in a baptism of sacrifice and blood, with union maintained, the nation supreme and its concord inspiring. We have seen the world direct its hopeful gaze on the great truths on which the founders wrought. We have seen civil, human and religious liberty verified and glorified. In the beginning, the Old World scoffed at our experiment; today our foundations of political and social belief stand unshaken, a precious inheritance to ourselves, an inspiring example of freedom and civilization to all mankind. Let us express renewed and strengthened devotion, in grateful reverence for the immortal beginning, and utter our confidence in the supreme fulfilment.

Progress Proves Wisdom.

The recorded progress of our republic, materially and spiritually, in itself proves the wisdom of the inherited policy of non-involvement in Old World affairs. Confident of our ability to work out our own destiny, and jealously guarding our right to do so, we took no part in directing the destinies of the Old World. We do not mean to be entangled. We will accept no responsibility except as our own conscience and judgment in each instance may determine.

Our eyes never will be blind to a developing menace, our ears never deaf to the call of civilization. We recognize the new order in the world with the keen contacts which progress has wrought. We sense the call of the human heart for fellowship, fraternity and cooperation. We have friendship, and harbor no hate. But America, our America, America builded on the foundations laid by the inspired fathers, can be a party to no permanent alliance. It can enter into no political commitments, nor assume any economic obligations which will subject our decisions to any other than our own people.

[illegible] our own people [illegible] understand, nor will the world [illegible] We have no [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] We want to [illegible] [illegible] We want to do our part to make the [illegible] [illegible] that governments and [illegible] are to be the [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] before the bar of [illegible]

Association for Counsel.

[illegible] to [illegible] the [illegible] of the world [illegible] and [illegible] for [illegible] for [illegible] [illegible] of world [illegible], to recommend a way to approximate [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] burdens of [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to point [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and would gladly [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] which [illegible] to clarify and [illegible] [illegible] of international relationship, and establish a world court for the disposition of such justiciable questions as nations are agreed to submit thereto. In expressing aspirations in seeking practical plan, in translating humanity's concept of righteousness and justice and its hatred of war into recommended action, we are ready, more heartily to unite, but every commitment must be made in the exercise of our national sovereignty since freedom impelled and independence inspired, and nationality exalted. A world super-government is contrary to everything we cherish and can have no sanction by our republic. This is not selfishness, it is sanctity. It is not aloofness, it is security. It is not suspicion of others, it is patriotic adherence to the things which made us what we are.

Today, better than ever before, we know the aspirations of humankind, and share them. We have come to a new realization of our place in the world, and a new appraisal of our nation by the world. The unselfishness of these United States is a thing proven; our devotion to peace for ourselves and for the world is well established; our concern for preserved civilization has had its impassioned and heroic expression. There was no American failure to resist the attempted reversion of civilization, there will be no failure today or tomorrow.

Rests on Popular Will.

The success of our popular government rests wholly upon the correct interpretation of the deliberate intelligent, dependable popular will of America. In a deliberate questioning of a suggested change of national policy, where internationality was to supercede nationality, we turned to a referendum to the American people. There was ample discussion, and there is a public mandate in manifest understanding.

America is ready to encourage eager, to initiate, anxious to participate in any seemly program likely to lessen the probability of war, and promote that brotherhood of mankind which must be God's highest conception of human relationship. Because we cherish ideals of justice and peace, because we appraise international comity and helpful relationship no less highly than any people of the world, we aspire to a high place in the moral leadership of civilization, and we hold a maintained America, the proven republic, the unshaken temple of representative democracy, to be not only an inspiration and example, but the highest agency of strengthening goodwill and promoting accord on both continents.

Mankind needs a world-wide benediction of understanding. It is needed among individuals, among peoples, among governments, and it will inaugurate an era of good feeling to mark the birth of a new order. In such understanding men will strive confidently for the promotion of their better relationships and nations will promote the comities so essential to peace.

Trade Ties Bind Closely.

We must understand that ties of trade bind nations in closest intimacy, and none may receive except as he gives. We have not strengthened ours in accordance with our resources or our genius, notably on our own continent, where a galaxy of republics reflect the glory of new-world democracy, but in the new order of finance and trade we mean to promote enlarged activities and seek expanded confidence.

Perhaps we can make no more helpful contribution by example than prove a republic's capacity to emerge from the wreckage of war. While the world's embittered travail did not leave us devastated lands nor desolated cities, left no gaping wounds, no breast with hate it did involve us in the delirium of expenditure, in expanded currency and credits, in unbalanced industry, in unspeakable waste and disturbed relationships. While it uncovered some portion of hateful selfishness at home, it also revealed the heart of America as sound and fearless, and restored a confidence unfailing.

What if all we have riveted the eye of all civilization to the unselfishness and the righteousness of republican democracy, where our freedom never has made offensive warfare, never has sought territorial aggrandizement through force, never has turned to the arbitrament of [illegible] [illegible] has been exhausted?

[illegible] the governments of the [illegible] have established a free [illegible] like our own, and shall have [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Running In Car Tracks

It's Sometimes Justifiable As An Alternative To "Fierce" Pavement

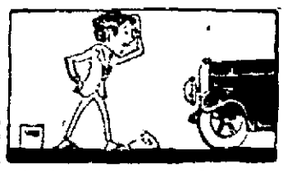
THERE IS NO DOUBT WHATEVER that extensive driving in car tracks is injurious to the treads of tires, as it tends to groove the rubber and ultimately to wear it through and even to injure the fabric. Since the car weight is concentrated upon a very small area the destructive effect is rather rapid even when the rails are in a well preserved condition, while splintered rails may cut tires deeply and practically ruin them in a short time. However, there is something to be said in favor of "taking to the track," which is almost always resorted to because the roadway itself is in a very rough condition. When the pavement itself is in such bad condition as to subject the car to very severe jolts, and to violent vibration, such as is likely to loosen the fastenings of running-gear and other parts and to stress the whole construction destructively as well as to discomfort the passengers extremely and the rails are in good condition it may be good judgment to use the rails as the less objectionable "horn of the dilemma." Furthermore, there is undoubtedly some saving in gasoline in running on the smooth iron rather than on the rough pavement. Tiremakers unanimously advise against the use of car tracks and they are perfectly correct from their standpoint, but there may be circumstances under which comfort and consideration for the car as a whole, are worth more than the resulting tire damage. The wisest course is to avoid, as far as possible, badly paved streets, with car tracks, and thus escape the necessity of making a "choice between two evils."

MAY NEED MORE GAS

G. J. S. writes: My four cylinder —— engine will not pull. When I start it, it backfires through the carburetor, which is a ——, and if I throw in the clutch, it stops. Can you give me any information that will be helpful?

Answer: The trouble may be that your carburetor gives altogether too weak a mixture, due to faulty adjustment or to it or the fuel pipeline being clogged with dirt. It is possible also that your spark timing is all right, very likely much too late. Try cleaning out the carburetor and refining and adjusting the carburetor for a richer mixture. Also check up ignition setting and valve setting, in accordance with the directions given in your instruction book or obtainable from the factory which built your car.

CEMENT CLOGS RADIATOR



H. P. writes: Since I put some gas cement into my radiator, the water circulation is nearly stopped up and the radiator gets hot. I have tried to clean it out with lye and a hose without avail. Do you know of anything that I can use more successfully?

Answer: We do not know the composition of the cement that you used and cannot tell you what to use to remove it. You might as well take your radiator to a radiator specialist and see what he can do. These repairers have acid baths, means for applying pressure and other facilities for dealing with these cases.

ENGINE THEORY QUESTIONS

R. L. B. writes: (1) Please give data for the firing arrangement [illegible] cylinder engines. (2) What is meant by compression pressure, and [illegible] of an engine? State how to form a fair estimate of gas engine horsepower.

Answer: A four stroke cycle engine is arranged to fire once in each [illegible] that is once in each [illegible] of crankshaft. With six cylinders all on the same crank shaft, in order that each cylinder should fire once during each such period and that the power strokes should be equally spaced, a cylinder should fire each one-sixth of the cycle. One-sixth of 720° is 120° and thus the ignition is so timed that some one cylinder fires each 120° of rotation. The order of firing is arranged so that the vibration may be minimized. (2) The smaller the space into which a given quantity of charge is compressed, the less cold cylinder-wall surface it will be in contact with and the less loss of heat will occur, when combustion takes place. (3) Horsepower equals the bore, in inches, squared, times the stroke in inches, times revolutions per minute, times the number of cylinders (four-cycle), when this product is divided by 16,000.

Question of general interest to motorists will be answered in this column, space permitting. If an immediate answer is desired, enclose self-addressed, stamped envelope. Address Albert L. Clough, care of our office.

THE COWARD

By Effie Maurine Page

Rising Above the Fear That Every One Thought Was His Master, This Boy Proved His Courage Was of the Hero Brand When the Time Came Which Proved His Mettle

(Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Co.)

THERE ain't many in our little town of North River who haven't heard of the coward—that big, overgrown boy, Bob Dean. No, there ain't many that haven't talked him over and laughed at him, but it took the thievin' and robberies to bring about the real truth and prove Bob to be just what he is.

For generations back the Edwardses have been famous for havin' some member of the family extremely lacking in courage, and they always blamed it on the fright of Old Uncle Jim when the Indians stole him and took him to Canada. They say he never got over the scare of seein' an Indian suddenly stand before him out in the wood lot and then a half dozen others rise out the brush and grab him. One thing sure—his hair that was black and flat before, was white and stood straight on end the rest of his life—even all those years after he escaped.

Well, they blamed it on this fright and claimed that each generation inherited the fear and was marked with it, but between you and me I believe they made their own cowards by their constant talk about it and expectin' it as they did.

Anyhow, when Bob was born fourteen years ago, he was a likely enough little fellow until he began to walk about and talk and then suddenly he got timid and easily frightened. Elsie, his mother, would pet him and excuse him, and they all talked over the old tale again until the child got so he wouldn't go into the dark alone or depend upon himself in the least. He was afraid of animals, of noises and people and was ready to cry every minute, and at school they called him "cry baby," then later, "the coward."

All through his boyhood he was not allowed to play much with other boys, "for fear he might get hurt or frightened," his mother would say, and his face took on that peaked, scared look that some children have. It used to rile me to see 'em all the time cautioning him into fear instead of explaining and burning out the fear by showin' a little confidence in him.

Two years ago his mother died and Bob and his father went to live with Grandmother Dean on the edge of town. He sort of turned to me for companionship since the boys laughed at him, and he'd sit in my shop hours at a time just amusin' himself by watchin' me. He'd talk, boy like, and tell me lots of the strange things he was thinkin'. I'd just whittle away and listen, and one day he opened his heart and told me how he hated being called a coward, and wished he could go to war and prove he didn't deserve it. I waited until he was through and then I said quietly, "I never did think you was a coward, boy!" and his face just shone, he was that pleased. After that he talked like a machine just oiled up and told me all the things he'd dreamed of doing that were courageous.

"You know, uncle," he said. "I've never had a chance to be brave," and I nodded. "I was scared when I was too little to know better, and nobody ever tried to help me get over it—it just grew up with me." His face sort of shadowed and looked far away and nobody that heard him say, "I aint no coward!" would ever have called him that again.

NOW that was a long time before the robbers came to North River and before any one had even dreamed that Grandmother Dean owned a valuable blue diamond, much less of it being stolen. Bob and his father and Grandmother Dean lived in a very simple but comfortable manner in their pretty home. Lots of folks thought they ought to have things more luxurious, being so well off, but that wasn't the way of either the old lady or Bob's father. "Who wants a lot of show," grandmother'd exclaim when some one suggested it, "Long's we're comfortable and happy here what do we want with a great big house!" And so, naturally, no one thought of a rare and priceless diamond being in such a house.

But as thieves have a way of doing, they knew about the stone, and that it was somewhere in North River Village—that is, so it seems now. Then, when the robberies was goin' on nobody thought of settin' an extra guard around the little cottage as some of the big summer homes had. But all the same, it was the Dean diamond they were after.

Years ago when Grandfather Dean was making prosperous trips across to France, he saw the diamond and bought it in one great splurge of money, thinkin' what a gift it would make for Mary, his wife. "Won't she be the queen!" he beamed as he packed it carefully for the long homeward journey. But Mary was not the kind of woman to bring diamonds to, and instead of being pleased, she scolded him roundly for such reckless spending and laid the gem away. Grandfather was so hurt he never spoke of it again.

In the corner by the china closet two men crouched and held their guns aimed at the boy

But after grandfather's death, grandmother was looking through some old things and came across the diamond and recalled the almost forgotten gift of long ago. Curious and more interested than she cared to admit, she took it to a big jeweler in the city and was astounded and a little frightened to learn that it was a famous stone, long lost and hunted. She was offered staggering sums of money for it, but she refused to sell for some strange reason, and kept it as a last treasure and memory of her husband.

She was afraid her son might want to sell it and get the money so she didn't even tell him—just dropped back out of sight as she thought, into the little country town where she kept her secret. So neither Bob nor his father knew about the diamond until the very last, and were not at all worried about burglars bothering their home. Afterward, grandmother said that she "had had a feeling all along that it was the diamond the thieves were after—they took so little from the houses and left such mute evidence of careful searching—"bureau drawers upset, baskets upturned, closets forced open and beds slit!" You see while the robbers knew the town, they didn't know the name, and no one knowing about the diamond, there was nothing said to give them a clue.

About three weeks after the first robbery grandmother was terribly frightened one noontime by a tramp who pushed himself into the kitchen and on into the dining room. Bob and a neighbor came in unexpected just then and the tramp beat a hasty retreat. Otherwise this story probably would never have been told.

Some strange intuition told grandmother then that the man knew she owned the diamond and she was so frightened that she decided to take Bob into her confidence. She could call the police and ask for a guard, but the Deans had come from brave stock and she didn't want to give in at the last.

At the supper table that night she couldn't help but say as she looked at Bob. "If you only had the Dean spunk instead of your mother's fear!" and Bob, hurt so many times by just such a remark, pressed his lips tighter and said nothing. One thing he wouldn't do was "ease" grandmaw! Going to a small cupboard in the bottom of the closet she opened a secret door and took out a small square straw box well wrapped and tied and brought it to the dining table. Bob's eyes were big as he watched and wondered. "I have something to show you," she said quietly, "Something you have never seen and may not see again."

Before untying the strings, she turned and walked to the bay window, drawing down each shade carefully so that not a ray of light could flicker out. Sighing as if satisfied, she resumed her seat at the table and took up the small box.

But when she drew the shades grandmother forgot that the middle window had dropped three inches from the top and was open and she failed to see the slinking shadow which hugged the wall of the kitchen near the dining-room windows. When the shades were drawn the man simply drew that much nearer, pressed close to the darkened window frame and listened to the voices.

Grandmother did not speak as she unrolled the beautiful diamond from its cotton and tissue paper and then let it lay sparkling on the palm of her wrinkled old hand. Bob, utterly hypnotized with the wonder of it, gaped open-mouthed and quite speechless, for a moment before whispering huskily:

"A diamond—where'd you get it?"

"I've had it many a year," she answered slowly, her eyes feasting upon the one-time rejected gift, and then she added proudly looking straight into the boy's eyes. "Yes, a blue diamond, and worth a mint of money, and your grandfather gave it to me!" Leaning forward, she rolled it gently onto the softer palm of the boy who sat stiff and unnaturally on the edge of a chair. Suddenly his eyes grew larger and he gulped twice before he spoke. "Grandma—I bet it's this diamond the thieves are after!" As if thinking of them for the first time he turned and looked furtively about and then, remembering that they were alone he was about to say something to reassure her when she spoke bitterly. "If only you had the Dean spunk instead of the Edwards fear!"

OF COURSE, he was only a fourteen-year-old boy and grandmother couldn't expect much from him, but it hurt to have her "rub it in" and add to the already heavy ache in his heart. So he just shut his lips tightly together and offered no comment.

"I'll take it down to the bank tomorrow and have it put in the safe," grandmother mused half to herself, "but tonight I must hide it in a good safe place—I don't feel safe with it in that cupboard even with that secret door—thieves know so much these days." She walked slowly about the room hunting a hiding place and to Bob's great astonishment laid it in the simplest kind of a place, unwrapped and to his mind quite in the open. "Taint always wisest to hide things away; sometimes you can fool burglars" she said mysteriously.

Perhaps it was midnight, perhaps a little later when Bob was wakened from a deep sleep by a heavy sense of something wrong and realized that that dull buzzing was a file at work somewhere down stairs. Stiff with fear and the sudden awakening he lay motionless for several moments and then realizing that his grandmother and he were alone and the diamond unprotected downstairs, he tried to move. His legs were like wood, everything inside tied up in a knot and paralyzed but his eyes shone like two stars, determined and eager.

"The diamond! The diamond! They're after grandma's diamond!" kept whirling through his brain and prompted the supreme effort which resulted in a stealthy laying back of the covers, slow movements into a sitting posture and at last his bare feet on the cold floor. He stood still to listen. No sound! They must already be in the house! No! There was the filing again—they were yet outside! Moving cautiously, almost sliding along the floor in fear of creaking the heavy boards, Bob reached the door. Upstairs in the northeast bedroom grandmother slept on, too far away to hear the noise. Somehow he must get across that hall and into his father's office-den where the telephone hung!

Downstairs a door rattled ever so little and Bob, horrified, stood still in an agony of suspense with that slow, steady freezing along the spine and that hair-raising fear which can come so easily in the middle of the night in a quiet darkened house! But again the filing was resumed and he knew they were not inside. He must be quick now and under cover of the heavy filing he hurried across the hall and into the den. Feeling his way carefully he took down the receiver and whispered instantly, his lips pressed close to the transmitter: "Police! Help! Robbers!" and waited only for the whispered reply, "All right!" and laid the receiver down where the girl could hear all that went on. There had been so many alarms that the telephone girls had long since ceased to meet them excitedly—they were as anxious as any one to catch the thieves and clear up the mystery.

The filing had ceased and downstairs it was very still. "The diamond! The diamond," seemed to shriek through his brain and he pictured the robbers seeing it as plainly as he. How could their searchlights fail to spy it out in that open spot? What could he do to save it—what must he do? He felt that the men were down there working in the darkness with lights he could not see. His hand went involuntarily to his throat to ease the desire to scream and then, quite suddenly and clearly, the plan came.

IN HIS bare feet and white pajamas he began to descend the front stairs, making no effort to go noiselessly but walking slowly and carefully with his hand on the rail. A ray of light flickered for a moment in the dining room and then went out and left everything dark. Reaching the kitchen Bob turned on the lights and went to the sink for a drink, turned them out again and passed on into the dining room, feeling cagefully along the walls to find his way. In the corner by the china closet two men crouched and held their guns aimed, but Bob walked on until he found the light and pushed it on, flooding the room with brightness. Unnoticing the men he walked to the buffet and picked an apple out of a basket and began to munch it.

"Hands up!" one of the men ordered without moving and holding his revolver carefully aimed, but Bob did not turn or reply. Again the man spoke and then drew nearer, still crouching and ready to fire and approached Bob from the other side, but Bob's face was quite tranquil and content except for the staring, far-seeing eyes which looked past them. "Sleepwalkin'—I'll be cursed!" the burglar whispered, quickly putting out the light but keeping the flash well on Bob. "Shall we wake him and make him tell where the stone is?" he asked.

"Wake him! I'll say not! Don't you know it's bad luck to wake a sleepwalker," the other one protested, coming forward. They whispered together in the darkness for a few moments and then decided to work quickly and get away without waking Bob if possible. Working around the room with their lights they hunted every corner—long out the workbasket and opened the buffet drawer. "The old woman hid it in here!" one of them whispered. "Let's try that sewing table over there."

Throwing things about the robbers at last found the little straw box hidden down in the very bottom of the sewing table and the older man turned triumphantly to say: "All right, Jim, let's get out. This is the easiest all right and we can't take any chances on the kid wakin' up!" And as soft as cat's feet they slid out of the kitchen door onto the back porch.

But as soon as they were gone, pandemonium broke loose outside. Shots were fired—staccato orders shouted—men running, an automobile started, more shots and a woman's scream from above. Bob, in his chair sat powerless, almost overcome by the excitement and was still sitting stiffly in the little low rocker when the police brought the robbers in. The house was lighted and grandmother came hurrying down in her red flannel kimono. As soon as he saw the robbers again, his anger drove out all fear and he got up—a ludicrous little figure in his white pajamas—and shook his fist in their faces. "You old fools!" he cried angrily, "you meant to steal grandma's diamond! Thought I was asleep didn't you—well I wasn't. I heard you gettin' in and sent for the police!" A grim of appreciation crossed the two hard faces at the boy's pluck, but the men said nothing. As yet no one had searched them and there was always a chance.

"ASLEEP!" grandmother questioned; "asleep down here?" Her eyes glanced at his bare feet and the thin night garments incredulously.

"Oh, I just though I'd foil 'em and save the diamond," Bob answered nonchalantly with his eyes on the robbers, but his grandmother would not be put off so he explained. "The other day Bill and Jack Evans and me tried to see who could stare at each other the longest and Jack said I was—that I looked just like Sam when he walked in his sleep. So—so I remembered and—and tried to fool 'em," he faltered.

"Some nerve, I'll say!" the chief of police said, laying his hand on the boy's head. "Guess this town'll never call him the coward again after catching these thieves." Bob looked up quickly as if not quite grasping the thought and then laughed. "I never thought of that—I just did what I could!"

"Well son, doin' what you can is real bravery and I guess after all most of us are brave if we get the chance," the chief added.

They began to search the men and found the small straw box so well tied up, and as they opened it, and found it empty, grandmother smiled. "More'n one way to trick a fool," she said grimly walking over to the sidewall and feeling carefully along the grooved plate rail. At first her fingers moved confidently and then as she failed to find what she sought, more frantically and she turned aghast. "They did get it, Bob, They got the diamond," she gasped.

But Bob hastened to comfort her. "No grandmaw, they didn't. Here it is," and he turned the half-eaten apple around and showed her the deeply imbedded diamond that he had pushed into the fruit.

"I knew they'd flash their lights everywhere and see it layin' on the plate all if they got high enough, so I run my hand along the wall, feelin' my way in, got hold of it and pushed it in the apple soon's I could," he explained simply.

No one spoke for a second—just too dumfounded, but it was the chief of police who spoke the truth when he said:

"If there is or ever was a trace of coward in your blood I'll eat my hat!"

And there ain't nobody in North River that don't think the same.

A Close Race

IN TEXAS they tell how, years ago, an Englishman there imported a famous wolfhound from Europe, in order that he might attain wealth catching wolves, by reason of the scalp money offered by one of the state authorities—$10 each.

Some died-in-the-wool Texans were invited to witness the first chase. They followed many miles through the prairie grass but without getting sight of either wolf or hound. Finally they came to a wooded spot, where a native was chopping.

"Did you see a wolf and a hound pass just now?" cried the Britisher.

"Yes, sir; they just passed."

"How was the race?"

"Pretty hot—nip an' tuck. But the dog was a little ahead."

The Broken Pitcher : A Story That Ends as Well as It Begins—By Thomas L. Masson

I MADE it a rule to fall in love with a handsome girl every year. This is the proper intellectual and emotional substitute for an annual vacation.

It is true that the elements which go to make up handsome girls are all the same. But the combinations are different. Hence the interest and excitement.

I confess that I was not always understood. Some of them have foolishly thought that the arrangement was to be permanent. But——

I say this in no spirit of vanity. An ordinary acquaintance with the world has given me a certain polish. My education is fairly good. In conversation, I always know when to drop the subject; this by the way is talent. I was born with it. Such a thing cannot be acquired.

I am also fairly well off—a great help in present time of trouble.

One learns by experience to exercise a certain amount of caution. It is only by attention to details that one commands the highest success. I never write letters, for example.

I was sitting one afternoon in my motor-car in front of the W—— Inn, waiting for my chauffeur to obtain some cigars, when a handsome girl came out. My observation has been fairly well trained, and after a brief survey I concluded immediately that she would answer the purposes of my next annual vacation. She was dressed with great care and with the air of one who had been born to certain necessary things. In a moment she had disappeared in a cloud of dust.

My chauffeur came out just then, and I ordered him to follow. Fortunately my car is seventy horsepower.

The handsome girl got out and ascended the steps of a house on Fifth avenue. I took the number and repaired to my club, where I

There is a man in my club who is perfectly invaluable—a sort of human directory. He knows the names of all the really best people, and what is more to the point, he knows their houses.

"James," I said, puffing my cigarette, "who lives at —— Fifth avenue?"

"The Pollertons, sir."

"There is a Miss Pollerton."

"Miss Helen, sir."

"She is not engaged."

"I believe not, sir."

"Her father——?"

"Is in the Street, sir."

"They go in summer——?"

"To Bar Harbor, sir. They also have a place at Newport."

"And Europe?"

"Every other year, sir. This is their year, I believe."

"The steamer directory, James."

"Right here, sir."

I ascertained that the Pollertons were to sail on the 22d. It was now the 20th.

I was at the steamship company's office in an hour.

There was, of course, nothing left.

I immediately called upon Mr. Pollerton at his office. Fortunately he was in.

I greeted him pleasantly and gave him my card.

"I am the young man who is in love with your daughter."

"I have never heard of you before, sir," he said in surprise. I smiled.

"Is there anything remarkable in that?" I replied. "How much do you see your daughter? Is it customary, sir, for American men to know all the young men who happen to be in love with their daughters?"

"Um. I suppose not. What is it that you wish?"

"You and your family are booked to sail on the S——, on 22d. You have three rooms and you yourself have a separate room."

"Well, sir?"

"There are unfortunately no other rooms left."

"Well, sir?"

"Would you mind giving up your room to me, and I shall be glad to make all the arrangements for you on some other steamer?"

"Isn't this an extraordinary request—from a stranger?"

I smiled again. The obtuseness of the man amused me.

"Only seemingly so," I replied. "It must be obvious to you that my society will be more interesting to your daughter than yours. She sees you every day, or can if she likes. She has always had you around—ever since she was born. You are an old story to her. Now I am new—capable of any amount of devotion. Consider, sir, your duty in the matter."

"There is something in that," he observed. I was writing out the check for the amount of the passage.

He gave me his booking in exchange, and thanking him, I hurried off to his daughter. I had previously ascertained (through James) that she would be at home up to 4 o'clock. This seems to be a small matter, but in affairs of this sort it is the looking ahead and making arrangements beforehand that counts. That is where so many fail where I have always succeeded.

I sent up my card, and when she came down greeted her pleasantly. She was naturally cool. They always are at first.

"I am the young man that your father wishes you to marry."

"I have never heard of you before, sir."

I mentioned my club, and told her a number of her friends with whom she was intimate.

"You do not believe me?"

"I am at loss to understand you—never having met you before."

I produced the booking.

"Your father's room—you are aware of it?"

"Certainly."

HERE it is—he has turned it over to me. That ought to be evidence of his great love for you—and his confidence in me."

"Why should papa wish to give up his room to you?"

"Didn't you wish it?" I asked in surprise.

"Why should I?"

She had evidently inherited her father's obtuseness; but I rather like her for it. It is just as well for a handsome girl to be reasonably ingenuous.

"Do you mean to say," I asked, "that you would rather have your father accompany you than myself? Now I put it to you fairly and squarely. Be direct. Your father is always with you—or could be. He is an old story." I added triumphantly. Why should I vary that phrase? Always in an affair of this sort, move along lines of least resistance. One needs all of one's energies for critical moments.

"I will promise not to bore you," I added rather superfluously. "If I do, have me thrown overboard. I can swim, you know."

"Poor papa!"

"Is delighted at the idea of your going without him. By the way, don't mention the matter to him. To praise him for such an unselfish act might set him up. Never praise your papa to his face."

I passed the next two day's pleasantly, buying waistcoats and cravats. Both being made to order, I kept an entire establishment busy night and day. Every one ought to do this occasionally to foster trade, and keep the masses contented.

On the second afternoon out I was holding her hand under a steamer rug while her mother was playing bridge down below.

"Am I the only girl that you ever loved?" she asked. I have often, by the way, noticed that a girl reared in Newport and Upper Fifth avenue is just as likely to make a remark like that as the most bucolic dairymaid.

"Can you doubt it?" I responded fervently.

"No, but I like to have you tell me so."

"I love you dearly," I said, good humoredly.

"Then you must marry me."

I STARTED. Such an idea had never occurred to me, as you may imagine.

"But my dear little girl——" I protested.

"I mean it. You must marry me at once. I am sure from what you have told me that papa wishes it, and, of course, mamma will not object. There is a clergyman on board. The ceremony must take place at once."

I shuddered. For once in my life I was thoroughly taken aback.

"Consider what you are saying!" I replied. "Why no one marries now."

She laid her hand on my arm.

"Now, dear, I may be old-fashioned about it, but I have made up my mind. It must be done."

Her absurd notion was growing on her. I wanted time to think.

"We are going to have a storm." I observed as nonchalantly as I could. "Don't you think, darling, we would better go below?"

"We are certainly going to have a storm unless you consent at once."

I was growing more nervous. It seems absurd to say it, but there appeared, even for me, to be no escape. It only goes to show that no system is proof against time. It had to come. I realized it, at the same time I was bound to die hard.

"Come, come," I said, "you are not well. The ocean has affected you. I——"

She waved to a passing attendant.

"Send for the captain."

"But, darling——"

I passed the next few moments trying to argue with her. But when a girl like that is actually bent on marrying one, what is one to do?

The captain came. The situation was briefly explained. He naturally sided with her. In an hour every one on shipboard was apprised of the approaching ceremony. In two hours we were one.

Even to this day I cannot forgive myself for it.

TWO weeks later I was sitting in the breakfast room at Baden-Baden with my bride. Charming place that. It had required the utmost strength of character for me to accustom myself to the new conditions. But after all, what is life without character?

There was a slight lull in the quiet buzz of conversation. At this moment it occurred to me to ask her a question which I had been waiting for her proper mood to answer.

"Pardon me, darling," I said, "but would you mind telling me something of which I am very curious to know? Just between ourselves, you know."

"Certainly not," she replied, with a charming smile.

"Would you mind, then, telling me why you insisted upon marrying me? It may seem inconsequent on my part, but I really wish to know."

She leaned forward and her voice lowered.

"Don't you know?" she whispered.

"No."

"For two reasons. First, because of your simplicity, your unselfishness and your modesty. Then again, I just couldn't bear the thought of your breaking any other girl's heart."

Bartram property, southeast corner of N. Prospect and Mill streets—only one block from the center of the business district.

If interested in a high-class location for business or light manufacturing purposes, investigate this.

If unfamiliar with 99-year-leases, consult your attorney, or see us. It is a new proposition in Marion, but thoroughly safe and is worth investigation.

BILLS PUT THROUGH CONGRESS YESTERDAY

One Provides Hospitals for Disabled Service Men.

Washington, March 4 — The senate adopted and sent to conference a bill providing approximately $16,000,000 for additional hospital facilities for disabled service men. The appropriation was contained in the sundry civil bill, but after the senate had been advised that that measure very probably would fail, it was decided to include the hospital item in a separate bill.

A bill designed to improve the service given soldiers by the war risk bureau also was passed by the senate and sent to the president. It provided $1,000,000 for the establishment of 11 original offices of the bureau throughout the country where soldiers can take their compensation and insurance claims for direct adjudication.

Girl Held For Father's Death.

Louisville, Ky., March 4.—Gertrude Glasser, 16, was held to the grand jury here on the charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of Julius Glasser, her father, who had been shot in the back. The girl, according to the police, shot her father with a pistol while he was attempting to strangle her mother. Glasser, a former county patrolman, the authorities say, abandoned the blame for the incident and pleaded almost up to the hour of his death that his daughter be not arrested.

HALF OF APPROPRIATION OF $1,500 PAID TODAY

Toward Maintenance of Farm Agent—City's Share.

Marion county today paid to the state treasurer $750, half of its appropriation toward the maintenance of the county farm agent in Marion county. The county commissioners have appropriated $1,500 toward this work and half of that amount became due March 1. The city pays forty-five per cent. of this appropriation.

LIVESTOCK MEN HOLD CONFERENCE

Steps Taken To Handle Shipments in Cooperation.

Cincinnati, March 4 — Through stabilization of live stock prices, to be brought about by regulation of the flow of meat animals to terminal markets, the cooperative live stock associations of Ohio hope to be able to increase the amount of money live stock raisers get for their products, and at the same time to lower the cost of meat to the consumer.

This was discussed at a conference here in which farm bureau presidents and secretaries managers of cooperative live stock shipping associations and officials of the Cincinnati stockyards participated. The conference was directed by F. C. Kelner, Columbus, director of marketing of the Ohio Farm Bureau federation, and F. D. Phillips of the Bureau of markets.

Kelner declared the live stock men do not seek to put commission men out of business, but to handle shipments cooperatively, so a higher price may be obtained by shippers, with elimination of loss from dead animals, lower freights and other savings to the ultimate consumer.

Mrs. Wilson Takes Tapestry.

Washington, March 4—The $15,000 tapestry presented to Mrs. Wilson, wife of the president, during the peace conference, will find a place in the new home of the Wilsons. Mrs. Wilson, it is learned, has removed the tapestry from the east room of the white house, where it has been hanging since it was brought to the United States.

Coal Men Give Bond.

James Monroe went to the capitol to be sworn in, surrounded by a cavalcade of prominent citizens, and upon his arrival at the capitol he was met by the Marine corps and several other military companies After his inauguration he gave a huge public reception, which set a mark for social functions of that day, and in the evening he attended an inaugural ball

John Quincy Adams failed to follow his father's example, for his inauguration led the way for real inaugural celebrations The inauguration parade was the greatest display that the nation had even seen up to that time and the social functions which followed were most elaborate. The guest of honor was John Adams, the second president of the United States and the father of John Quincy Adams

Had Old Guard.

When Andrew Jackson took office it was in the midst of a bitter partisan struggle. John Quincy Adams took a long horseback ride, rather than to attend the inaugural and the only uniformed military troop available refused to escort Jackson and he finally went to the capitol under the escort of an old guard of revolutionary veterans, hastily called into service. Jackson made an impression, however, on the crowd that gathered to hear him make his inaugural address on the capitol portico, which was used for the first time for that purpose. At the close of his address he was the center of a storm of admirers and going into their midst, he held an informal reception. The crowds tagged along cheering wildly as he returned to the White House At the White House the crowd became a mob and ran wild through the mansion, causing great damage to the finishings

Martin Van Buren's inauguration brought great crowds to Washington and the carnival spirit prevailed. Van Buren rode to the capitol in a state coach made from original timber of the frigate, Constitution, drawn by four horses elaborately bedecked with brass-mounted harness.

Harrison Rode White Charger.

Preparations for a great parade were made for William Henry Harrison and the Whigs turned out in great strength. President Harrison refused to ride to the capitol in state, however but mounted his favorite saddle horse, a white charger, and cantered down Pennsylvania avenue bareheaded and acknowledging the plaudits of the huge crowds that wanted to pay their respects to "Old Tippecanoe"

James K. Polk rode at the head of a great parade in his inaugural procession, through a heavy rain and a sea of mud.

Zachary Taylor was known as "Old Rough and Ready" and his inauguration seemed to fit that characterization, for it was the noisiest celebration that staid old Washington had ever witnessed. General Taylor laid away his favorite military costume, however, and rode in a carriage drawn by four gray horses to the capitol at the head of an enthusiastic noise-producing parade

Snow filled the streets when Franklin Pierce fell into line with his predecessors and headed an inaugural parade.

James Buchanan's inauguration was the signal for a great social celebration Buchanan was a bachelor.

Lincoln Carefully Guarded.

Abraham Lincoln's inauguration was in the midst of an armed camp. Attempts on his life were predicted Riflemen were on every roof along the line of march, a cavalry squad guarded Lincoln and troops were stationed at the capitol ready to check a riot Lincoln took the oath of office in a clutter of masonry, for the capitol was then being remodeled and the famous dome under construction President Lincoln failed to attend the inaugural ball, much to the disappointment of Washington society

Grant's Pompous Parade.

The height of pomp and ceremony was attained when U. S. Grant became president Troops from every section of the country formed a great parade and the town took on the aspect of a carnival A great inaugural ball followed in the evening and for days and days Washington and the nation celebrated It was anything but a dry celebration, according to historians

Grant appears to have set the standard, for from his inauguration on down, Hayes, Garfield Arthur, Cleveland Harrison McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson have all participated in pompous processions as they took office

There have been more simple inaugurals than this today for Theodore Roosevelt was quietly sworn in at a private residence after the death of William McKinley There have been far more elaborate inaugurations than this today. But President Harding seems to have reached a happy medium, dignified and solemn, impressive and interesting, yet lacking utterly in the carnival spirit, the inaugural today marks the progress of the nation—from George Washington's coach and four Jefferson's saddle horse and Zachary Taylor's noisy march, to the whirling drive in a modern motor to the capitol and the dash back to the White House and to business.

For the first time official business appears to have taken precedent over celebration

HISTORIC BIBLE USED BY HARDING IN TAKING OATH OF OFFICE TODAY

Washington, March 4—When President Warren G Harding took the oath of office as president of the United States at the inaugural ceremonies today he laid his hand upon the same Bible which was used for the first inauguration of George Washington in 1789.

President Harding expressed the wish that this sere and yellow Bible, carefully preserved for over 172 years, be used in administering the oath of office instead of the Bible of the Supreme Court of the United States, which is customarily used at inaugurations

The old Bible is the most sacred and treasured possession of St John's Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons No 1, of New York City. In recent years it has been perpetually under lock and key in a safety deposit vault to protect it from the ravages of time It was taken from its resting place a few days ago and guarded by a delegation of three stalwart Masons selected by the lodge was brought to this city The guardians of the priceless treasure have never allowed the Bible from their sight during the inauguration trip and they were stationed on the inauguration platform today, handing the book to Chief Justice White who administered the oath to the president After the oath was administered the Bible was immediately returned to their keeping

The Bible became the instrument of George Washington's introduction into office in a curious way The first president was sworn into office at the town Federal building in New York City which stood on the site of the present sub-treasury. There was not a single copy of the Bible in the building and Chancellor Livingston who was to administer the oath was Master of St John Lodge of Masons He sent a messenger to the lodge rooms nearby for the lodge Bible and Washington placed his hand upon it as the oath was delivered, and at its close pressed his lips to the open page before him.

—The Bible will be returned to the safety deposit vault after the inauguration today

THREE REMAIN AT FIRST POSTS

Hold Jobs They Enter as Wilson Cabinet Members.

ONE IN CABINET IN CHANGED POSITION

Numerous Changes Made Under President Wilson.

Bryan Is First To Go and Others Drop Out for Various Causes. Story of Changes Made in Mr Wilson's Cabinet.

Washington, March 4—Cabinet officers are coming and going in Washington today The ten men who will help Warren G Harding in directing the government through the difficult months ahead are coming The ten who are going are those who have clung grimly to Woodrow Wilson's leadership for better or for worse during the tempestuous years of his administration

A photograph of the outgoing cabinet today would reveal only four of the faces appearing in the original Wilson cabinet that came in so hitherto eight years ago today. Of these four only three are to be found in the places originally assigned them—Daniels and Burleson and Wilson The Three Musketeers as Washington knows them, have all been at various times the objectives of wave after wave of caustic and bitter criticism Sometimes it appeared that these waves were so high that they must crumble be engulfed but each time they have emerged unshaken and still clinging grimly to their jobs and to the leadership and doctrines of the man in the White House with whom they cast their political fortunes eight years ago

Twenty-one men have sat around the long table in the cabinet room during Woodrow Wilson's two terms as president How many will sit around the same table before Warren G. Harding joins those who have retreated from the White House offers interesting food for speculation

Wilson's First Cabinet.

In that first Wilson cabinet were William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska secretary of state, William G McAdoo, of New York secretary of the treasury, Lindley M Garrison, of New Jersey secretary of war; Josephus Daniels, of North Carolina, secretary of the navy, James Clark McReynolds of Tennessee, attorney general, Franklin K. Lane, of California secretary of the interior, William C Redfield, of New York, secretary of commerce, David F. Houston, of Missouri, secretary of agriculture, William B Wilson, of Pennsylvania secretary of labor, and Albert Sidney Burleson of Texas postmaster general

Bryan was the first to go He found his mind unable to "go along" with that of the president in the highly exciting and nervous days of note-writing that preceded America's entrance into the war He resented White House dictation in the affairs of state, for which he was responsible as secretary. So with a "God bless you, that has been historic, he resigned

Lansing Succeeded Bryan.

Robert Lansing, of New York succeeded him Lansing took up where Mr Bryan left off and stuck grimly to the job through the long, peace negotiations at Paris He remained secretary until after Mr Wilson returned from his unsuccessful pilgrimage through the West in behalf of his cherished league of nations The president was a very sick man unable to discharge the duties of the chief executive Their already widening relations stretched to the breaking point when Mr Wilson practically accused his secretary of state of trying to usurp presidential powers during this period and Mr Lansing got out He was practicing international law in Washington and working in writing his memoirs which if reported will prove sensational when published Lansing was succeeded by Bainbridge Colby, another New Yorker who retires today

Garrison Dropped Out

Garrison followed Bryan to the ranks of retirement after differing with the president as to the best method of preparing America for the war that was to come. He got out gracefully with no noise and little sensation either before or after. He is now running the Brooklyn Rapid Transit company as receiver Newton D Baker of Ohio succeeded him and goes out today after six years of trying service

Next to go was McReynolds He wanted to retire to the quiet dignity of the United States Supreme court bench and President Wilson gratified his desire replacing him with Thomas Watt Gregory of Texas, who later retired at his own request and engaged in a lucrative law practice in Washington A Mitchell Palmer of Pennsylvania, then came into the attorney-generalship where he has since remained although subjected to an almost continuous fire of criticism and objection

McAdoo's Long Service

William G McAdoo of New York was the cabinet bulwark during the most trying days of the government's war activities He was Mr Wilson's first secretary of the treasury, and he cemented their always cordial relations by marrying Eleanor Wilson the president's second daughter Then came the war When the government took over the railroads McAdoo became director general along with his other duties. He retired over a year ago in order to "make a living" as he himself expressed it. Carter Glass, of Virginia, then in congress, succeeded McAdoo as head of the treasury department. He stayed until at the White House request, he went into the United States senate to aid the administration in the then hot fight over the ratification of the treaty. Glass was succeeded by David F Houston, who was secretary of agriculture, and had long desired a treasury berth Houston retires today

Lane Was Popularity

Franklin K. Lane of California, the first secretary of the interior, was immensely popular in government and congressional circles. Like McAdoo, he found the financial sacrifices of staying in the cabinet too great, and retired at his own request a year or so ago He was succeeded by John Barton Payne of Illinois who goes out today

William C Redfield was Mr Wilson's original secretary of commerce He, too, was the subject of a great deal of criticism during his tenure of office He retired some months ago to engage in private business in New York, and was replaced by Joshua Alexander, of Missouri Then in congress Alexander joins the ranks of ex-cabinet officers today.

The agriculture department has seen only one change David F Houston, now secretary of the treasury, was the first and when he went into the treasury berth he was succeeded by Edwin T Meredith, of Iowa, the present secretary

Such is the history of the Wilson cabinet that goes out today. Only three—Daniels, of the navy, Burleson of the postal department and Wilson of the labor department have a record of eight years' continuous service in their jobs

Return to Private Life.

Recently the International News service asked the outgoing members what they were going to do after March 4 The replies were practically all the same—after first vouchsafing the questioner of their fox at being relieved from public duty they said they were going to return to their various pursuits in public life

Within a few months you names will be appearing on the front pages of the newspapers in the guise of those which have become familiar through long association Before long it is entirely probable that the names of outgoing cabinet officers will be almost forgotten by the general reading public, engaged in learning what the Harding administration is going to do Cabinet officers disappear quickly from public view, with few exceptions once they are out of office Who, for instance, can name the cabinet of William Howard Taft? Or of Roosevelt? Such is fame in the service of the government.

THE TEN MEN MAKING UP THE CABINET OF PRESIDENT HARDING

Here is the new cabinet as it will be constituted when Warren G Harding, Secretary of State Charles Evans Hughes of New York, Secretary of Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, of Pennsylvania, Secretary of War John W Weeks of Massachusetts, Postmaster General Will H Hays of Indiana, Attorney General Harry M Daugherty, of Ohio, Secretary of Navy Edwin Denby, of Michigan, Secretary of Interior Albert B. Fall of New Mexico, Secretary of Agriculture Henry C Wallace, of Iowa, Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover of California and Secretary of Labor James J Davis of Pennsylvania

HIGH TRIBUTE PAID OBREGON

An American Talks of Mexican Executive.

BELIEVES OBREGON WILL MAKE GOOD

Expects President To Win Approval of United States in Short Time.

Mexico City, March 4—"When President-Elect Harding enters office I feel sure he will be able to come to an early understanding with President Obregon of Mexico."

This declaration was made here today by Elmer Dover, close friend of the American president-elect

In his interview, Mr Dover paid high tribute to Dr. Adolfo Alvaro Obregon saying

"Although I conversed with President Obregon under the handicap of not understanding Spanish, which made an interpreter necessary, he impressed me and inspired me with great admiration He is a man of sound ideas, a business man whose purpose is to do for Mexico all that is best But at the same time he wants to respect the rights of foreign nations He is of the same mental type as Mr. Harding In fact, one thing that struck me was the similarity in their way of thinking The impression I carried away after talking with General Obregon is that he is a conservative man cautious and painstaking and withal able to read the features of Mexico He can well be remembered as the one who has married the love principle coming proof that a strong influence is back of them

"I do not think there is another man in Mexico so well adapted for the office of president as General Obregon Mexico is fortunate to have such a man at the helm

"When I say that I think President Elect Harding and General Obregon will come to an early understanding I speak as a private citizen It is purely my opinion I am not here as the representative of Mr Harding I can not speak officially I have not even been asked by any one in the United States to give my impression of Mexico.

"Of course, if I were to meet Mr. Harding, we may discuss Mexico, but there is no understanding that I shall make a report I do not believe that any one who has come to Mexico has in any way acted for Mr. Harding He would not send men to Mexico on missions before he entered the White House and assumed the duties of the presidency.

Mexico Has Great Future.

"There is nothing mysterious about my trip here. I have not tried to hide my affairs One must come here to know Mexico My impressions of the country are good. It is a wonderful country and very rich. While I have been here I have had a glimpse of politics in Mexico and I have learned more about them than I could in years by attending a long distance study from Washington

"I believe Mexico has a great future. I believe that Mexico will have both peace and prosperity and that there will be commercial intercourse between Mexico and the United States that will be financially valuable to both countries."

Other late American arrivals were W H Crocker a banker, and J. H Rosseter, both of San Francisco.

BURLESON IS SUED FOR HEAVY DAMAGES

Publisher Wants $500,000 from Postmaster General.

Washington March 4—Julius Gerber, secretary of the Workingmen's Co-operative Publishing Company owners and publishers of the New York Call, yesterday filed suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against Albert S Burleson, postmaster general, for $500,000 damages for alleged arbitrary acts in relation to denying second-class mail privileges to the publication The plaintiff alleges that between December 3 1919, when the paper was barred from the mails, until August 25, 1920, it lost considerable money in advertising and subscriptions, as the result of the postmaster general's action.

The paper was barred from the mails by the postmaster general because of editorials which it was alleged reflected on the government's conduct of the war

EIGHT MEN HELD IN ANARCHIST PLOT

Cleveland "Red" Raid Is Nipped in Bud.

Cleveland, March 4—Facts which involved the assassination of Cleveland citizens connected with the Loyal American league, the destruction by dynamite of downtown buildings and an anarchist campaign of anarchistic propaganda throughout the city are believed to have been nipped by the arrest here recently of eight men said to be members of a dangerous anarchistic group. The arrests were made by agents of the department of justice, working in cooperation with officers of the Loyal American league, and had been preceded by two months of detective work. The eight men are now in the county jail, facing charges under the espionage law that the government expects will lead to their deportation

Russian Revolt Suppressed.

London, March 4—Latest reports received by the British government tend to show that the Russian soviet government troops have suppressed the revolt in Petrograd and Moscow Cecil B Harmsworth, undersecretary for foreign affairs, stated in the house of commons.

BERLIN POLICE AFTER THIEVES

Valuable Persian Rugs Stolen in Germany.

ROBBERIES DONE ON LARGE SCALE

A Special Division of Police Assigned To Trail Professional Rug Stealers.

Berlin, March 4—Persian rug thievery is the game of criminal kids and rich which today is occupying the ingenuity of Germany's crack second story men and her best detectives. The thieves have done business on such a large scale that a special rug squad has been organized at the Berlin Police Presidium

With the usual methodical system of the Berlin police, Criminal Commissioner Tegtmeyer, of the rug squad, issues a warning to Berlin householders telling them how to proceed, now that they still have their rugs, to be able to identify them when they are stolen. Get a description of them with measurements prepared by an expert rug-man warns the commissioner, and in case of unusually valuable rugs it is well to have them photographed. He doesn't add to this suggestion that a good German police dog might make the identification unnecessary by preventing the burglary That might put down the business of the rug squad.

Activities of the rug specialists in the burgling profession caused 1,125 reports of stolen carpets to be made to the Berlin police during the year 1920. This probably represents much less than one-half the number of cases, for the thieves systematically cut up and removed the stair carpets in apartment houses, many of which cases were never reported to the police. The total appraisal of stolen carpets for the year is estimated by Commissioner Tegtmeyer at 31,000,000 marks Of these carpets about 7,500,000 marks worth were returned through the police.

The rug thievery was conducted on so large a scale that the police department has found it necessary to rent a large store in which to display rugs recovered in raids on "fences." The rugs awaiting identification include several hundred valuable antiques.

Wilson Is Named.

Washington, March 4—President Wilson today appointed Secretary of Labor Wilson a member of the international joint boundary commission This is the position the president had previously offered his secretary, Joseph P. Tumulty.

Holding A Husband

BY ADELE GARRISON.

Lillian and I made a hurried [illegible] of locking up my house for the night. The furnace fire banked properly we made a quick tour of the rooms, locking doors and windows.

"If I were you," Lillian suggested, "I would leave a light in one room upstairs and one down below with curtains raised just enough to let the light shine out. Not bad enough to show that the rooms are empty."

"A very good idea," I assented. "But—do you think those marauders are apt to come back tonight?"

We were standing in my room, and I could not repress a shuddering glance at the heavy chest the unknown intruders had made of my keepsake trunk.

"Not once chance in a million," Lillian returned promptly and convincingly, "but—it is always well to guard against the millionth chance. They might have been simply young hoodlums at that."

My heart quickened its beat. It was the first direct information Lillian had given of the theory I knew she must have mapped out concerning the wanton mischief of which my home had been the scene. But her last sentence certainly meant that she considered the theory of wanton hoodlumism as "one in a million." The professional [illegible] theory fell to the ground because [illegible] of value had been taken. [illegible] direction, then were her theories pointing?

She moved toward the door, and I knew that my questions would not be answered. Therefore, I packed it into a corner of my brain and closed the door tightly upon it until such time as Lillian should have unravelled the tangled threads of the twisted pattern which had been left for our study.

"Now for 'old Sammy,'" I said, a few minutes later, when, the last window closed and the electric switches turned on, we stood upon the doorstep once more.

"Is he to be found very far from here?" Lillian asked.

"No, just down the street at a small grocery store," I answered. "He delivers groceries during the day, and does plain and fancy 'detectiving' at night whenever he is called upon."

Lillian did not speak again until we were in the car and it was turning out of the gateway into the road.

"Would you mind, Madge?" she asked hesitatingly. "Would you mind telling this 'Sammy' that I have rented your house for a few weeks, and that I am his employer? I want to give him a few directions and ask him a few questions—and—"

"You would rather I was out of the picture when you're doing it," I smiled promptly. "Of course, my dear."

There was that in Lillian's voice when she answered me which made me flush with pleasure.

"Do you know what a dear you are!" she exclaimed. "Most women would drive me wild with curiosity and thwarted vanity at a request like that. But you know, don't you, that I really have a very good reason for not wanting to trouble you with these crazy theories of mine until I have proved them true or false?"

"Don't you think it is pretty late in the day for you to begin excusing yourself to me?" I asked quietly.

"I stand corrected," she returned, and in another minute we had drawn up in front of a small building labelled, "The Palace Grocery." In absurd contrast to the size and dilapidation of the building beneath the sign.

"By the pricking of my thumbs," Lillian quoted under her breath, "surely, this is 'Sammy!'"

I had time only for a quick assent before the man of whom I was in search hurriedly drew up the old flop he was driving out of the shop yard, hitched him to a convenient post, and came hobbling up to us.

"Well, well, Mis' Graham!" he said heartily, pulling off his cap. "It's sure fine to see you around here again. When did you get back?"

He was a friendly, kindly old figure as he stood looking up at me, his old hat respectfully removed from his thatch of gray hair, his wrinkled face and faded blue eyes emphasizing by their expression the genuineness of his words.

"We came into New York yesterday," I said.

"And how are Mr. Graham, and the old lady and the baby, and the old gentleman?" he asked cordially.

I explained briefly that only Dicky and I had come North, and that Lillian had rented our home for a few weeks.

"Mrs. Graham tells me," Lillian struck in, "that you are a very efficient guardian of houses at night."

"Well, if I do say it that shouldn't, there don't much get past me, if I am gittin' along in years. Me and 'Sukey' here"—he patted his bulging hip pocket affectionately—"my best girl, I calls her, we've seen some pretty stirring events around these parts sometimes."

"I've no doubt," Lillian observed, "and I wish you would undertake the watching of Mrs. Graham's house until further notice, beginning tonight."

"You don't mean to say," he began excitedly, "that anything's been disturbed up there! Then I wasn't wrong yesterday afternoon, I could have sworn I knew that—"

He broke off abruptly and looked at me in troubled fashion. Lillian spoke promptly:

"We must hurry back now, Mr. Hinman," for this is Sammy's legal cognomen. "When you call at Mrs. Durkee's house tonight, please be prepared to tell me anything you have observed."

Will Rheumatism Again Bind You Hand and Foot?

If you had Rheumatism last year and treated only the pains of the disease by rubbing with liniments and lotions, you can be sure that soon again you will be in the shackles of this relentless foe. You may get some slight temporary relief from the pains of the disease by the use of these local remedies, but Rheumatism is too real and relentless a disease to be rubbed away.

So many cases of Rheumatism come from a tiny germ in the blood, that you should try a remedy that has proven so thoroughly satisfactory in these cases. S.S.S., the fine old blood remedy cleanses the blood of all impurities, and removes all disease germs that may creep into the blood. Begin taking S.S.S. today, and if you will write a complete history of your case, our medical director will give you expert advice, without charge. RHEUMATISM LEAVES YOU FOREVER

Deep Seated Uric Acid Deposits Are Dissolved and the Rheumatic Poison Starts to Leave the System Within Twenty-four Hours.

Every druggist in this county is authorized to say to every rheumatic sufferer in his vicinity that if two bottles of Allenrhu, the sure conqueror of rheumatism, does not stop all agony, reduce swollen joints and do away with even the slightest twinge of rheumatic pain, he will gladly return your money without comment.

Allenrhu has been tried and tested for years, and really marvelous results have been accomplished in the most severe cases where the suffering and agony was intense and piteous and where the patient was helpless.

Mr. James H. Allen, the discoverer of Allenrhu, who for many years suffered the torments of acute rheumatism, desires all sufferers to know that he does not want a cent of any one's money unless Allenrhu declairely conquers this worst of all diseases and he has instructed Schmidt & Co.'s Drug Store to guarantee it in every instance.—Advt.

DROPSY TREATED FREE

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the Great Specialist, Will Send a $3.75 Treatment and New Book Free.

Send for Many Remarkable Reports After Three to Ten Doctors Failed.

At first no disease is apparently more harmless than dropsy; a little swelling of the eyelids, hands, feet, ankles, or abdomen. Finally there is great shortness of breath, smothering spells, sitting up to breathe, cough, fainting spells, sometimes nausea and vomiting, even bursting of the limbs and a lingering and wretched death if the dropsy is not removed.

Dr. Miles has been known as a leading specialist in these diseases for 25 years. His liberal offer is certainly worthy of serious consideration. You may not have another opportunity.

The Grand Dropsy Treatment consists of four dropsy remedies in one, also Tonic Tablets, and Pura-Lax for removing the water. This treatment is specially prepared for each patient and is three times as successful as that of most physicians. It relieves usually the first day and removes swelling in six days in many cases. Delay is dangerous. Dr. Miles' book contains many wonderful testimonials.
